position we will occupy at no distant day among the iron markets of the United States. The transactions for the week. In the aggregate amount to seven hundred and sixtons. During the week 150 tons of Kentucky pig Iron have been sold to a Wheeling manufacturer. Kentucky iron commands the highest price of any of to transport the vast quantities of this metal, now untrade that will greatly add to our commercial prosperity. On the Beading Ruilroad, where careful examinations have been recorded, and with a tennage unsurpassed by any railroad, Zerah Colburn says it is found that American iron wears out but from one-third to onewear of 60 pounds American rail was about 11 per cent. annually. The average of four years' wear of the Erie

(English) pattern was lo per cent. annually. In American rolled and pig iron, the same general superiority is observable. The American pig is both harder and tougher. Some of the leading Loc motive builders will use no other than American, on account of its superior hurdness, for cylinders, driving wheels, &c. For our wheels, where the best from is indispensable, American plg is used almost exclusively. The mark tis very firm but not quotably higher. "Will any mowing come to this sewing?" asked her father with a very natural attempt at a pun.
"Those who do not sew shail not reap," said little Annie, cleverly taking up her father's meaning, and her work hag at the same time, as she

Three weeks after: "Annie learning to be a scholar," said Mrs. Linton: "no more demands for sewing." That after Annie came bounding into the house from school, sat upon her father's knee, opened her work-bag, which hung over her arm, and putting a screwed up paper into his hand: "There's the mowing."

"There's the mowing."

Her father undid the paper, and found four half crowns. "Annie." questioned her father, "where did they come from?"

crowns. "Annie," questioned her father, "where did they come from?"
"From the sewing," answered Annie laughing delightedly at his surprise, as she escaped from his knee, and ran out of the room, to delay a little longer the solution of the riddle.
"Wife," said John Linton, "its impossible that Annie could carn all this by the sort of child's play girls call work: and whom did she carn it from! I'm afraid there's something wrong?" And to tell the truth Annie Linton was practising a little disguise: nor had she given her father all the money she had carned. The sum originally was twelve shillings. This was all designed for her father alone: but a prior claim had come in the way. It was cold winter weather, and the children of the school brought their forms in a sort of square, around Mrs. Ray's fire. Annie, who was a favorite of the mistress, always occupied a warm corner close to her own big chair. Out he day in question Mrs. Roy happened to be out of the room.
"I'll change seats with you, Jessie Willson, if you're cold, "said Annie, addressing a little girl, a very book-worm, who, ela lin a thread-bare printed cotton gown, sat shivering over her lesson.

Jessie thus invited came a little nearer.

"You should put on a woolen frock like mine and warm vonreste well at van mother? Rechains and warm vonreste finel her me and warm of finel her me and warm vonreste finel her me and warm vonreste finel her me and warm of finel her me and warm vonreste finel her me and war

"Has your mether no fire at home this cold weather?" asked Annie in amazement.

"No," said Jessie: "I wished I dare bring her with me here—it's warmer than at home. And I know mother is i'll, though she won't tell mo."

"Sit there," said Annie, placing Jessie in her warm corner, "and don't go out of school without me."

"Here," said Annie, after a slight pause, untwisting the paper in which were deposited her first earnings. "I won't go in with you, for your mother might not take it from a little girl like me; but"—and she just two sliilings into Jessie's hand—"that is to buy you something to eat, and a hire, and, if your mother can sew as well as I can," said Annie, with a pardonable vanity, "I can tell her how to get plenty of money to pay for both."

No wonder Annie's riches increased; the first investment was a good one. Nevertheless the concealing of it from her parents she knew to be wrong; and she added to her little prayer at night, after the usual ending of "God bless father and mother—and forgive me for keeping secret that I helped lessie Wilson." Could the Recording Angel earry up a purer prayer to Heaven?

Of course Vir. and Mrs. Linton very soon discovered that Mr. Seanwell, of the "Ready Made Linen Warchouse," was the grand source of Annie's wealth. He said there was no one who could work like her, and said he would give eighteen peneach for the finest description of shirt awking. The wealth. He said there was no one who could work ike her, and said he would give eighteen pence each for the finest description of shirt-tuaking. This was no great payment for Annie's exquisite stitching. To year- ago it would have brought her three slings and sixpense a shirt. But Annie is of the present, 1 to f the past; and as she could complete a shirt a day, her fingers flying swifter than a caver's shuttle, she earned him shillings a week. "Good wife," said Mr. Linton, we are not so poor but that we can maintain our daughter until she's twenty, and by that time, at the present rate her earnings, she will have a little fortune in

Just received and for sale by NOCK, WICKS & CO. A BEAUTIFUL SKETCH.

Annie Linton was the best sewer in Mrs. Roy's school; and the nistress declared, on inpecting the first shirt she made for her father. "That the Duke of Buchleurch himself might wear it!" This was high praise for little Annie, who was only gleven years of ago: and she never forgot it. Her work was the neatest ever seen. Then she did it so quickly, her mother could not keep pace with her daily demand for "souncthing to sew."

"I wish Annie would take to her book" said Mrs, Linton to her husband. But it was quite clear that Annie would never take to her book; she had a little reading and less spelling: and yet she could "mark" with cotton all the letters of the alphabet, as if she was the very miracle of learning.
